  - > Wall Street tumbles on lack of stimulus details: - U.S. stock indexes dropped sharply on Wednesday after attempting a rebound in the previous session, on skepticism around President Donald Trump's stimulus plan to combat the coronavirus outbreak. Expectations that Trump would announce "major" stimulus measures helped Wall Street claw back losses on Tuesday from a bruising sell-off at the start of the week on the back of a collapse in oil prices. Trump met with fellow Republicans in the U.S. Senate on Tuesday and discussed a payroll tax cut, but no concrete measures have been announced.
  - Yen's March to 100 Seen Unstoppable Amid Rising Volatility: -The yen's elevated volatility is spurring talk of intervention. But the Bank of Japan may be powerless to halt the currency's rise. Swings in the yen climbed to an 11-year high this week, suggesting that policy makers could have stepped in as the currency surged to the strongest since October 2016. The rapid advance may have unsettled Japanese authorities but market players think there's little point in trying to stand in the way.
  - Oil falls 3% as Saudi, UAE plan for higher output capacity: - Oil prices fell on Wednesday after Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates announced plans to boost production capacity and the coronavirus fed worries about demand.
  - U.S. Oil Inventories Jumped by 7.7 Mln Barrels Last Week – EIA: - U.S. stockpiles of crude oil rose much more than expected last week, the Energy Information Administration reported
